

PhD in sociology and MA in Political Science.

Head of Mobile Research at eNet Internet Research and Consulting Ltd. Former client service director of Ipsos Interactive Services and has more than 5 years of experience in field of online panel research.

Assistant professor of Corvinus University of Budapest (Department of Information and Communication) and former director of Information Society Research Institute of Budapest University of Technology and Economics. Robert has more than 10 years of experience in academic research and teaching.

Recent research interests are mobile and online research methods, smartphones, new media and information society.

His main publication is an edited course book entitled Information Society: from Theory to Political Practice which was published in English, Hungarian and Greek languages within the NETIS project (see: www.ittk.hu/netis). He is author of numerous papers and conference presentations on different phenomena of information society.

